Note The Import dialog box lets you import a raw picture, a TIFF file, and even a Photoshop file. The Image Size, Quality, and Background options are covered later in this chapter. Figure 2-1. At this point, you can create a duplicate of the original image by choosing Edit→Duplicate Layer from the menu. The duplicate layer is based on the original layer's Background, but you can change the color of the new layer using the Background Color and Opacity options in the Layers palette. ##

Converting a Digital Image to the Camera Ready Format In addition to importing an image, you can also use the Photoshop _file format_ (Photoshop's native file format) to save a picture. The file format is the default setting for any image that you save using the Save for Web and Devices (Photoshop CS6) or Save for Websites (Photoshop CS6) dialog boxes. The first and most important step in saving a digital image is to create a new document on the canvas that will Subclinical thyroid disease in non-diabetic outpatients with and without polycystic ovary syndrome: prevalence and relation to metabolic and endocrine parameters. In an attempt to identify the prevalence and possible pathogenic role of subclinical thyroid disease (STD) in patients with polycystic ovary syndrome (PCOS) compared with non-PCOS controls, we evaluated a cohort of non-diabetic outpatients, undergoing an ultrasound evaluation for infertility: group 1 (n = 49) included subjects with PCOS; group 2 (n = 49) included subjects without PCOS. Serum levels of total thyroxine (TT4), free thyroxine (FT4), thyroid-stimulating hormone (TSH), follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH) and fasting blood glucose were measured. Thyroid volume was measured by ultrasound. The following diagnoses were made according to Rotterdam criteria: PCOS (n = 29) and non-PCOS (n = 36). The prevalence of PCOS, SD and euthyroidism were similar in both groups, whereas the prevalence of subclinical hypothyroidism was higher in the non-PCOS group (11 vs. 1.1%; p = 0.02). The frequency of abnormalities of hormone levels, and glucose and lipid metabolism, as well as abdominal fat distribution, did not differ significantly between the two groups. An inverse relation was found between the free androgen index (FAI) and serum FT4 in patients with PCOS. However, none of these results were statistically significant. The prevalence of elevated serum TSH levels was higher in the group with PCOS (p = 0.01). Subclinical hyperthyroidism was found in two out of the 49 patients (4%) in group 1. Our data demonstrate that the prevalence of subclinical thyroid disease is higher in women with PCOS than in non-PCOS. Although we found no effect of the PCOS on metabolic and endocrine parameters, an inverse relationship between the FAI and FT4 levels in the PCOS patients suggests that a pathogenic role of hyperandrogenism and elevated FT4 levels cannot be excluded in STD in PCOS.
